The Ethics of Listening Creating Space for Sustainable Dialogue

Elizabeth S. Parks

“Theoretically sophisticated and empirically grounded, The Ethics of Listening brings communication research into a new phase. Informed by fifty years of research in listening, Parks breaks new ground by decolonizing that research. Listening is an object of study, as Parks describes the processes of listening she observes in diverse communities. Listening is also her research methodology: in listening to diverse communities, she creates new models for listening practice and a new vision for ethical listening. The Ethics of Listening is valuable for its insights into listening, to be sure, but it is innovative as a model for communication research methods.” —David E. Beard, University of Minnesota Duluth
